

Author's tale of success

The owner of a Toronto-based publishing company has taken a new turn in her career path – she is publishing her own book.

Veronica Low, a 38-year-old single mother, has released a book titled The Tale of The Rabbit and the Rose. Low describes the book as a “fable for adults” and “a story about love and all the things love can be.”

Low graduated from Carleton University with a political science degree in 1985, and obtained a job as a writer in Montreal. She soon found her way to radio at Toronto's 92.5 CISS FM before she founded Roar Publishing, a registered publishing company “that welcomes first-time authors.”

For Low, it will be the first book she has published. She will be promoting the book tonight at 7 p.m. in the Omega Centre Bookstore on Yorkville Avenue.
